Application for Solutions Consultant, AI Studio, Munich

Dear Hiring Team,

There is a line in your job description that made me write this: "Be a storyteller and help customers imagine how they can use AI to transform their ways of working." That is exactly the work I want to do.

Asana was one of the first professional tools I learned to use properly. Early in my career, project-managing a game studio in Stockholm, Asana was how the work actually happened. What stuck with me is how it made coordination across timezones feel obvious, without forcing structure onto people.

This role being in Munich, in the city where I live, is the thing that made me stop and read the description twice. I am excited to meet people in person, conduct interviews, run workshops, and give presentations about how to use AI in real work. That is the part of the job I want to do most.

What I want to bring to Asana is the kind of value that gets created in those rooms. Helping a customer move from "we should use AI somewhere" to a clear plan their team will actually adopt. Following through on what was promised. That is the trusted-advisor work described in the posting, and it is the work I want.

I am available from early July. Currently in the United States through 25 June and happy to do remote calls in the meantime. Thank you for reading.
